7-21-26@7:10 AM- Shared 7-23-26

What you see before you Daughter in the war with the Hormuz Strait is the well-planned strategy to deplete in the public's view the weapons, aircrafts, and the soldiers of Babylon America's forces lessening their ability to protect themselves when it's their time to fall by Putin's first strike. The antichrist's Pi 88 packages he has mandated for New York's Manhattan shall weaken her, but will not completely destroy this city of Babylon called Manhattan that My Word speaks of in Revelation chapter 17 found in the Holy Bible version of it. When the 10 rogue, nuclear devices hidden in the suitcases are detonated this shall finish the destruction of New York's Manhattan in its entirety.....

Daughter, when you look back into the recent years you can see how America-Babylon has been depleting her very own weapon reserves by her many so-called aid packages. Such as with Ukraine and its war against Russia. Even your nation's elite hybrid army hidden beneath the ground and other technological weapons can't prevent her fall. She has been purposefully weakened from both within and without. Babylon's city of Manhattan falls in one hour's time. Then also does her evil lands fall within this allotted time. It is written that it shall be and thus it shall be and come to full fruition.

The Saving King, August Sorrows & America Falls 8-11-26@4:14 PM Shared 8-15-26

Too many battles your nation tries to fight to try to remain the big dog bully as your world calls their top powers sometimes. Your ammunition and firing abilities in many areas have dwindled down as I have spoken it would, while the government officials try to hide it from the public. In addition, there is sabotage coming from within the Pentagon building as many try to forcefully remove President Trump before I say it's time.

Overview of the U.S. Military Ammunition Shortage

The U.S. military is facing a critical ammunition shortage, primarily driven by the ongoing conflict with Iran. This situation has raised concerns about the military's readiness for potential future conflicts, particularly with China.

Key Factors Contributing to the Shortage

- Depletion of Stockpiles: The war with Iran has significantly reduced U.S. inventories of essential munitions, including:
  - Patriot missiles
  - THAAD interceptors
  - Tomahawk missiles
- Replenishment Timeline: Experts estimate that it could take between one to four years to rebuild these stockpiles, depending on the specific type of munitions.
- Increased Demand: The demand for munitions has surged not only due to the Iran conflict but also because of military support to allies like Ukraine, which has further strained U.S. resources.

Implications of the Shortage

|--------------------|-------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| Military Readiness | Reduced munitions may leave U.S. forces vulnerable in future conflicts. |
| Production         | Current production rates are                                            |

| Strategic Concerns  | The shortage raises alarms about the U.S. ability to engage in multiple conflicts simultaneously. |

Future Outlook

The U.S. military's focus on high-tech warfare has led to a neglect of conventional munitions production. As a result, the military may struggle to sustain operations in prolonged conflicts, highlighting a need for a strategic reassessment of munitions inventory and production capabilities.

The US military has depleted much of its stockpile of long-range missiles in its five-month war with Iran, according to Reuters.

The prospect of a deal between the US and Iran appeared to be gaining traction on Tuesday, after Qatar said a proposal had been drafted and American Treasury Secretary Scott Bessent sounded hopeful on an agreement to reopen the Strait of Hormuz.

Jonathan Lemire: Munitions shortage 'a significant problem'

In a piece he co-authored with Nancy Youssef for The Atlantic, Jonathan Lemire reports that, due to the war in Iran, the country's stockpile of long-range weapons is too diminished to combat a threat in Asia, officials say. Lemire tells Morning Joe the shortage is "a significant problem" that's also "informing the president's thinking." He reports the U.S. has considered escalating the conflict in Iran to bring leaders to the negotiating table, but there are fears there aren't enough munitions to defend a counterattack in the region.

According to The Washington Post, President Donald Trump confronted Defense Secretary Pete Hegseth over dwindling US weapons stockpiles during a Cabinet meeting at Camp David. The report said shortages of long-range missiles and air-defense interceptors have limited Washington's options for additional large-scale strikes against Iran.

THE INVISIBLE SQUEEZE: THE 2026 AMMUNITION SHORTAGE IS ALREADY HAPPENING UPSTREAM

NEWS

06/23/2026

Jeff Brothers

THE COMMERCIAL SEGMENT IS NO BUENO

RETAIL SHELVES LOOK NORMAL TODAY, BUT WHOLESALE SKU DEPLETION, GLOBAL MILITARY DEFENSE CONTRACTS, AND MANUFACTURING DISRUPTIONS MEAN A MAJOR COMMERCIAL SUPPLY CRUNCH IS ALREADY LOCKED IN FOR 2026.

For the average consumer or casual observer, the ammunition market appears perfectly stable. If you walk into a local big-box retailer or scroll through a major online storefront, shelves are stocked, prices are stable, and variety seems abundant.

But retail inventory is a lousy indicator

U.S. Military's MASSIVE Weapons Stockpile Is Legitimately INSANE

On 3 August 2026 the Pentagon signed agreements with Lockheed Martin and Northrop Grumman to triple Patriot interceptor production and quadruple THAAD — from 96 THAAD interceptors a year to 400, on a seven-year $58 billion Army contract, with capacity nearly tripled at Allegany Ballistics Laboratory in West Virginia and a new Munitions Acceleration Center breaking ground in Camden, Arkansas. One day later, CNN reported that nearly 80% of THAAD inventory and roughly half of Patriot stocks have been expended. We break down where that number actually comes from, why the real figures are classified, and why three outlets published three irreconcilable estimates in a single week. Plus the architecture all of it feeds: the Integrated Battle Command System, the F-35's AN/APG-81 acting as an airborne sensor node, the AN/TPY-2, SPY-6 and Naval Integrated Fire Control-Counter Air, and why the F-22 is not the star of this particular story. Round Up: Russia's record 8,300 guided aerial bombs in July and the overnight Iskander strike on Kyiv's logistics layer.

Even though President Donald Trump has dismissed reports of a U.S. munitions shortage, The Atlantic's Missy Ryan says that such a shortage has been a "problem decades in the making," and it is "going to take years to solve it."

"These munitions just were not a priority in the post-Cold War era," Ryan told Washington Week moderator Jeffrey Goldberg.

Ryan added that the munitions shortage "goes back to the rashness" of the Trump administration's planning of the Iran war and "overconfidence" after the military operation in Venezuela.

President Donald Trump defended Pete Hegseth after a report about a disagreement over dwindling US weapons stockpiles raised questions about the Pentagon chief's future in the administration.

Trump's comments followed a Washington Post report on Wednesday that said Trump vented frustration with Hegseth on the sidelines of a Cabinet meeting last week, saying he had been misled about munitions shortages. Trump has refuted that reporting, repeating that "defense companies are building the largest number of plants and factories in our country's history."
